Subject: Upcoming recruit

S/Sgt Campbell: On one of our recent shifts I met a gentleman who is apparently coming to our detachment from the next recruitment class. He did a ride-along with our shift and I would like to talk to you about some concerns that have been raised.

Apparently he is a Russian male who has also spent time in the Israeli Army, with the name of Michael JACK (DOB: 16 Dec 1972)

In my short encounter he made a comment about how he likes guns.

He commented about guns continuously during his ride-along. He apparently has 32 registered guns. His obsession with guns was quite disturbing. He also mentioned the persons he killed (shot) during his time in the Army. The officer he rode with will make notes with all concerns, should this be required.

A concern by the officer was what the result would be in making command staff aware of an officer's "instincts" that were a bit "hair raising".

As I was being told, I felt that these points should at least be looked into or brought to the attention of our recruiting department.

I understand this recruit may be riding with PC Pollock today (05 Aug 2008).

Sgt Rathbun

Analysis:

- 'In my short encounter he made a comment about how he likes guns.'
- 'He commented about guns continuously during his ride-along.'
 - While I do not remember exactly what I discussed regarding guns, as a collector of vintage firearms I would have probably commented on the history, makes, models, calibers, etc. of various vintage firearms as I had a basic manual of military small arms (Small Arms of the Word, The Basic Manual of Military Small Arms, by W.H.B Smith and Joseph E. Smith, Seventh Edition, 1962, 723 pages long) that I used to read frequently at the time. It would appear that being knowledgeable in the history of small military firearms was a qualification for being classified by the Peterborough County OPP Detachment's members as being a "gun-happy" person. Meanwhile, one of the recruits in our class at the Provincial Police Academy talked about his vast collection of firearms which was much larger than my collection (he had 52 registered firearms) and yet he was not viewed as a concern or had to undergo another psychological assessment with a civilian psychologist/psychiatrist as I later on had to. Yet he was not viewed by others to be concerning. But then again he was born and raised in Canada.

- I am on the other hand of Russian ethnicity and also an immigrant from the Middle East and had served time in the Israeli Navy, not the Army. PC Gravelle, who was the officer I rode with before PC Pollock, deliberately lied to his sergeant, Sgt. Rathbun, and greatly embellished his recollection of our conversations. My 3 years of service in the Israeli Navy consisted of providing technical support within the confines of Israel without any exposure to actual war. Aside from firing my firearm during routine military firearms training I never had to use it in any actual defensive or offensive operation. I was demobilized with honor upon the completion of my mandatory three year term service. Yet one can see that how easy it was for one by fabricating a story (of me seeing action and killing people) and exaggerating the actual number of firearms I had and then refer to me as a crazy Russian (“Crazy Ivan”) to convince their supervisor very easily that the information was true and hence the supervisor sent out that e-mail to show that Command Staff should be equally concerned. After all, I was from the Middle East and the Middle East is always in the news as being at war. I am a Russian Jew and Israel is full of Jews so I must be a trigger happy or gun happy Russian (Ivan) Jew.
- To demonstrate how racially charged and prejudicial such types of views as illustrated in this e-mail can be, consider the reality, if possible of the following: A 36 year old demobilized Canadian Army soldier who, having served three years of combat duty in the Afghanistan crisis and having just been hired by the OPP goes for a ride along with a police officer. That officer later has a conversation with his Sergeant and tells him he had a Crazy Canadian as a ride-along who never stopped talking about his guns and the many people he had killed in war. He’s like a “loose cannon”. He is “gun happy” because he has so many guns. He has 32 registered guns (which is such an identifiable lie for all one had to do is a Canadian Firearms Registry Online (CFRO) check and confirm the lie). The sergeant in turn believes the account to be true and suggests in an e-mail that the concerns about this Canadian War Veteran should be brought to the attention of the recruiting department. This Canadian War Veteran later learns that the majority of the individuals he worked with referred to him as a Crazy Canadian and felt he was a “Loose Cannon” and poisoned his work environment. The Staff Sergeant comments to the Inspector in an e-mail that the Sergeant has had everyone monitoring him and reporting back to him. If one were to believe that this would have been the treatment given to a Canadian by birth there would be something wrong with their belief for they would be severely chastised for discrediting and defaming a Canadian War Veteran.
- ‘He apparently has 32 registered guns.’
 - Sgt. Rathbun did not even bother to do a CFRO check of my registered firearms! Had he done the CFRO check he would have seen that I had 22 registered firearms and NOT 32, the majority of which were vintage firearms for some of which one could not even get ammunition in Canada.
- ‘His obsession with guns was quite disturbing.’
 - How could Sgt. Rathbun come to that conclusion when he only had a ‘short encounter’ with me’?

- The answer is simple. It was PC Marc Gravelle who lied to him and poisoned his mind against me. Sgt. Rathbun in turn lacked the professional fortitude to even do a CFRO check of me let alone simply asking me personally about where I gained that knowledge from and what my real military experience was.
- 'He also mentioned the persons he killed (shot) during his time in the Army'.
 - I simply lack the appropriate words to describe how false and incompetent this statement is!!! If anything, this statement also implies that I knew details of the persons I allegedly killed. What a malignant lie!
- 'officer's "instincts" that were a bit "hair raising"'.
 - PC Marc Gravelle's lies about me painted a picture that Command Staff ought to have been concerned about.
 - Again consider the point I illustrated previously. I doubt very much that a Canadian War Veteran would have been considered to have instincts that were "hair-raising" in a negative sense. I would hasten to say that such an individual would have been admired and welcomed at the detachment.

Furthermore, in light of this information it is noteworthy to mention how the former Chief of York Regional Police Armand La Barge and I started out our first conversation. One day in August 2007 I was working out at the Trent University's weight lifting room. I had picked up a magazine about firearms in the local gun club I was a member of (Peterborough Fish and Game Association) (Exhibit 68), earlier that day and was browsing through it in between the exercises. At one point the Chief saw the magazine and commented to me that he had just returned from Alberta where they fired all sorts of firearms including Rocket Propelled Grenades. When I asked him what it was about, he responded that he was a police officer and attended that training/demonstration in the course of his police officer duties. I then told him that I had served in the Israel Defense Forces and he promptly told me that he had been in Israel for approximately a month on an Anti-Terrorist training course sometime in the past. I then asked him what rank he was holding to which he replied he was Chief. I asked what that meant and he said that meant he was on the top. At the time, my knowledge about policing was limited to basic general facts, such as police officers wear a uniform and drive police vehicles with lights and sirens. Hence, I asked him how many personnel he was in charge of and he said something about 1,400 uniform and 600 civilian members. At that point I realized that it must have been a large police force and he was an important person. I further inquired about the force and he told me about York Regional Police, where it was located and explained to me how Ontario was divided into regions and municipalities, each with its respective police service. That is how our brief acquaintance started (that continued over a few workouts until the end of August 2007) during which we conversed a lot and he inspired me to pursue a career in policing.

Anticipated evidence of Mr. Michael Jack (Schedule A):

In August 2007 I met the Chief of York Regional Police, Armand La Barge, in the Trent University's weight lifting room. At the time, I was teaching Computer Science courses on a contract basis and was looking for a permanent job where I could maximize my skills and cash in upon the knowledge and skills acquired over the 35 years of my life. At the time, the Chief was completing his Master's degree in the Native and Canadian studies at Trent University. During a few workouts together we talked a fair amount and among other things discussed our traveling and academic experiences, books we read in common, spirituality, religion, physical fitness and firearms. In one of the conversations towards the end of August the Chief said that I had some great qualifications. He further suggested that modern police services were looking for people with multilingual and computer skills and that I was a good candidate for becoming a police officer. I did not know much about policing at the time but the Chief presented himself to me as an erudite and wise man and literally inspired me and gave me the encouragement to re-evaluate the direction of my life. I decided then and there that I would pursue a career in policing (Exhibit 11b).

I find it ironic that I was inspired to pursue a career in policing in Canada by an experienced and knowledgeable police officer that was big on multiculturalism and who started a conversation with me about guns and saw potential in me (Exhibit 11b) and how my life was ruined by narrow-minded police officers steeped in racism who perceived me crazy because of my proficiency in firearms.

Forwarded to you as per Sandy's out of office message.

It would be nice to know the contents of the above e-mail. The tribunal should note that the Applicant has been denied this bit of disclosure that could contain further evidence of a rush to pre-mature judgment on the part of Command Staff.

I just spoke with PC Pollock, who did have JACK ride with him yesterday. As with the first officer, JACK made it a point to take Pollock into his residence and show him his collection of firearms. PC POLLOCK is standing beside me, echoing the concerns as to why this recruit made it such a point to show off these firearms.

JACK is looking for more ride-alongs, and the officers he's been out with feel it would be appropriate if a supervisor or current Coach Officer were to go out with him and see if the behavior remains consistent, and see if other independent officers have similar concerns.

Sgt Rathbun.

Just thinking about this recruit who is going on ride alongs/showing firearm collection etc.

Without seeing the file etc. Do you think he may be a little overly keen - going on ride alongs - trying to impress the officers (showing gun collection) to fit in wanting to be accepted. With cultural differences perhaps going to this extreme to fit in ??? Anything in the file to suggest this?

Sent from my BlackBerry Wireless Handheld

I applaud Insp. Sandy Thomas for having the professional fortitude to suggest that I might have only wanted to fit in and be accepted. Because inviting officers into my house and showing them my registered firearms and how safely and securely I was storing them was my way of wanting to fit in and be accepted. I trusted the police officers. I could not have imagined that they were going to use the innocent act of mine of inviting them in, showing them where I lived, and showing them my registered firearms (and which is most important how securely and properly I stored them) against me.

Hi Denise,

As per our discussion, this person is from Israel. There, he did mandatory Military time. He was educated at Trent University.

During a recent ride along, he mentioned his interest in guns to the extent he showed the officer his gun collection and discussed violent encounters while in the military.

He has been offered employment and start in the Aug intake.

Please note the excerpt: 'discussed violent encounters while in the military'. I never discussed any violent encounters during my military service for doing so would have been a blatant lie as I have never had any violent encounters during my entire military service in the Israeli Navy Defense Forces. I served in the Israeli Navy and my involvement with the military was limited to providing technical support to fast moving boats of special marine forces. I was in charge of maintained naval electrical systems. Though I was issued for the duration of my military service a personal service firearm (M-16 automatic rifle), which I carried with me wherever I went just as countless other Israeli soldiers have been doing, I never used it in combat (Exhibit 101).

(April 2, 2008) (Volume 6, 41):

Present or Previous Employer Israeli Navy
Telephone Number () unknown	Date of Employment From: 1993/05 To: 1996/04
Complete Mailing Address (include Postal Code) unknown
Supervisor's Name and Title unknown	Position Title Marine Electrician
Brief Description of Duties Provided front-line technical support to special marine forces.
Reason for Leaving end of mandatory military service

I am shocked and appalled at the blatant lies of PC Marc Gravelle. Furthermore, in our recruit class (411) at the Provincial Police Academy we had a number of demobilized Canadian Armed Forces soldiers. At least one of them served in the Afghanistan and not only saw combat, but also sustained injuries in combat. Was he examined by a psychologist/psychiatrist in reference to his violent encounters during his military service? Was he considered to be a "gun-happy" person? I do not believe any of those war/combat veterans were treated the way I was (re-interviews of personal references followed up by a special interview by an OPP psychologist/psychiatrist) because they were not minorities whereas I was a minority and not only Russian by ethnicity, but also a Jewish immigrant from Israel. Hence, the scrutiny I was under could only be attributed to my racial, ethnic, place of origin and Israeli citizenship background!

JACK, Michael 080558

Sgt. Joanne Whitney contacted the following in regards to concerns of JACK, Michael in relation to his gun collection.

I spoke with two of his references, a Professor Brian PATRICK who is the head of the Computer Program at Trent University. He advises that he has been to Michael's residence and seen the guns. They are all collector's weapons that he has carefully collected and he is very proud of his collection. This is the reason that he shows them off. In no way does he feel that he is "gun happy". He sets his eyes on a specific gun to add to his collection only and many are vintage WWII guns. They are all registered and stored properly.

I also spoke with Andre MELANEY who is Michael's landlord. He advises that he has seen the guns and has been with him when he attended the local gun club which he belongs to and actually shot many of these guns. They are all stored in a special safe and he is not concerned in any way with Michael having these in his household. He is very proud of the collection and doesn't just show them to anyone. He would not describe him as "gun happy" just a proud collector.

Michael Jack also contacted me as he had heard that we were contacting some of his references. I advised him that this was an issue that was not fully pursued during his background investigation. He advised that he had attended the detachment to meet the people he was going to be working with and had gone on ride-alongs with two officers. The two officers were Cst. John Pollock and Cst. Mark Gravelle who were both invited to his residence to see this collection. He advised that he does follow the rules in regards to firearms.

A CPIC check was conducted in regards to CFRO and found that he has 22 firearms registered to him at this time.

Please note that Sgt. Whitney failed to mention that the President of the Peterborough Fish and Game Association, Ken Prentice, (Exhibit 68) also had been contacted in reference to the allegation that I was a "gun-happy" person. Mr. Prentice conveyed this information to me sometime in the spring of 2009. He told me that he had been asked whether he had observed anything inappropriate about me with respect to handling firearms and following gun-safety procedures. He told me that he had observed nothing wrong with me and that was what he told the OPP.

Anticipated evidence of Mr. Michael Jack (Schedule A):

I believe that my first coach officer Cst. Filman was not doing his job with respect to coaching me properly from the very beginning. Knowing that my first posting was going to be Peterborough Detachment I attended there in late July 2008 (shortly after accepting the offer of employment) to introduce myself. It was there that I met Cst. Marc Gravelle at the front counter who offered to take me on ride-along patrol. I subsequently went on two ride-alongs, during which for the first time in my life I was exposed to police work. The first ride-along was with Cst. Marc Gravelle and the second one was with Cst. John Pollock. It is noteworthy to mention that at the end of each ride along the officers dropped me at my home, which was incidentally located in their respective patrol zone (Zone 3). I invited both officers inside for a few minutes to offer them some refreshments and to simply show them where I lived. Incredibly, a few days later my reference contacts started receiving phone calls from Orillia and being questioned whether I was a "gun-happy" person. Once I learned that, I phoned Orillia and asked them what was going on. I was told it was a follow up on my background investigation and it had no relation to officers visiting my home. They lied to me.

At the time that my references were being contacted with regards to me being "gun-happy" I was clueless as to why it was happening. That was the reason I called the OPP General Headquarters in Orillia to inquire. It did not make sense to me because not only I specifically mentioned in my job application to the OPP that I had extensive weapons training, that I was a member in the local gun club, that I had attained Gold Level in handgun target practice, but I also told my interviewers (Sgt. Haennel and Sgt. Whitney) all about it on May 29, 2008.

Hello

I think I should work with the Academy on this one along with recruitment. The position should be as such: We have offered the candidate employment conditional on his passing academy and OPC and probationary time. We still can discuss with the Academy concerns, decide what to look at, identify different hypothesis that can explain this behavior (such as maybe he thought this would impress the officer), and then strategize on a meeting between psychologist and candidate. So I need to know when he is at the academy?

On August 25, 2008, at the Ontario Provincial Police Headquarters in Orillia during one of the orientation sessions we were asked to introduce ourselves one at a time. There were approximately 107 recruits (class 411) at the time in the auditorium. The orientation session was conducted by Sgt. Tozser. When my turn came I stood up and briefly introduced myself to the class. Immediately, Sgt. Tozser addressed the audience in a clear and loud voice, 'Did anyone get that?' She then addressed me personally, 'You have a very thick accent. You have to speak very slowly.' The whole class witnessed that. I never received such comments during my entire tenure at Trent University. I remember that I was very embarrassed and perspired at the time. I hope the Tribunal can see how derogatory and humiliating that comment was to make one perspire in an air conditioned classroom. Retrospectively, I can see how that one comment in front of the whole class negatively affected my leadership scores at the Provincial Police Academy.
